I wanted to do a service to God, to the King, and to the Argentine Provinces.5 CHARACTER OF THE FIRST ARGENTINE NEWSPAPER Though nothing in the name or subtitle of the Telegrafo Mercantil indicated a connection with literature, its first number is notable for its publication of an ode to the Paran River, by Manuel Jos6 de Labarden, the outstanding Argentine poet of his day: August Parana, sacred river, Illustrious first-born of the ocean. This poem is in the nature of a triumphal hymn. It is still read with pride by Argentinians and ranked as the noblest work of its author. A keen awakening to the grandeur of the Parana River and to the beauties of other natural features of the La Plata country had come with the visits of Spanish explorers in the closing years of the eighteenth century. A desire for the expression of this aroused interest accounted in part for the welcome given the Telegrafo Mercantil. Colonel Cabello showed comprehension of his field by finding contributors and subscribers from the very beginning. A modern critic says that the Colonel established premiums for the collaborators with the skill of a proprietor of a Yankee periodical of to-day. 7 Among the contributions for which he offered money were collections of inedited papers containing material on the ancient foundation of cities, towns, convents, seminaries, etc. ; articles from thinkers on the following themes: How will the Argentine...
