Many books have been put forth and many suggestions have been made to aid the teacher of English in his work. All have been of value; our work is improving from year to year; and within the last decade especially, much progress in our teaching has been made. The advance in our ideals is most apparent when we note the increasing clearness with which teachers see that composition-writing is a practical matter, and that, consequently, their first duty is to have their pupils write. Indeed, it is coming to be felt that considerable such practice should be preliminary...
