Through this method of instruction better teaching is possible, and the children become accustomed in some degree to high school methods of instruction, especially if there be supervised study, and promotion by subjects. In fact, it is often possible with a little adjustment to accomplish much the same ends that are obtained through a Junior High School without the addition of a ninth grade. This plan is extremely well adapted to the towns where there is no local high school and where the 6-3-3 plan is impossible. In the consolidated school special subjects such as music, drawing, domestic and manual arts, and in distinctly rural sections the study of agriculture, can be taught to the best advantage. These subjects are now considered an essential and practical part of every school curriculum. Specially trained instructors should be employed if satisfactory results are to be secured, and well-rounded progressive courses worked out to prevent over-lapping and loss of time. With skilled instructors to direct the children, their school work in these branches can be given definite application to their social life. The musically inclined students may form an orchestra, or a glee club or school chorus, thus using their talents for participation in school assemblies or in community entertainments. A school orchestra, begun possibly in a small way, will prove an incentive for younger children to take lessons...
