P, Benjamin, of Louisiana, on the Right of Secession, Delivered in the Senate of the United States, Dec, 31, 1860 I say her sword, because I am not one of those who believe in the possibility of a peaceful disruption of the Union. It cannot come until all possible means of conciliation have been exhausted; it cannot come until every angry passion shall have been rinsed; it cannot come until brotherly feeling shall have been converted into deadly hate; and then, sir, with feelings embittered by the consciousness of injustice, or passions high-wrought and inflamed, dreadful will be the internecine war that must ensue. Mr. President, among what I consider to be the most prominent dangers that now exist, is the fact that the leaders of the Republican party at the North have succeeded in persuading the masses of the North that there is no danger. They have finally so wrought upon the opinion of their own people at home by the constant iteration of the same false statements and the...
